

STRESS FREE COMPUTING

How many times have you felt like smashing your monitor repetitively with the cricket bat quietly residing out in the shed? I've had my fair share of computer related tantrums! In my earlier years, I have thrown a mouse across the room, smacked the side of a monitor, broken a keyboard over my knee, decapitated a printer and crushed a floppy disk in my hand! (Just to name a shameful few!) Thankfully, I do not partake in these practices anymore as I have inevitably discovered that such methods do absolutely nothing towards resolving a problem I have with a computer.

Computers are machines and have no feelings! They do not set out to deliberately ruin your day nor can they calculate your stress levels, yet, it is amazing how quickly one can be overcome with rage toward a chunk of chips and peripherals.

Your computer is a very useful tool tailored to suit your needs and for whatever you use it, accounting, photos, music etc, it can be your best mate when working properly. But what happens when there is a problem and you can't figure out a solution and whatever you try does not even look like resolving the problem. This is exactly the moment when ones stress levels shoot through the roof! Bang your fist, hit the keyboard, pull your hair (one of my personal favorites), nothing works.

Stress will not help you out when you need to work toward a solution.

The best thing to do when you can't solve a problem with your computer is to take a good long break from it. Clear your head by doing something else, go for a walk or have a cuppa because sometimes the answer can come to you when you stop concentrating so hard. Another thing to do is share your dilemma with a friend or colleague.

There is a good chance someone you know has encountered the same problem and can help you toward a practical solution. Look at recent software activities, there is a very good chance of finding the answer to a problem there. Surf the net for help, 9 times out of 10 a Google search on your problem will reap results.

Lastly, if your computer is still under warranty with the seller, get them to handle it, that's what they are there for! Be cool!
